We do not recommend a photo is included unless specifically requested and you feel it is reasonable to include. For example for some media, promotional or sales roles it may be a fair request.

But for any general role it is not required and we do not suggest you include but if you do make sure it is only head and shoulders and professionally taken.

Job seekers often feel compelled to include their nationality, marital status, smoker status, health status and even religion. None of this is needed and at worst can be used to discriminate against you.

Your career is so valuable that you must have a professional CV or Resume so you can get an interview. Use our CV or Resume Builder today and have limited lifetime access at no extra cost in the future.

Amusing CVs

A couple more reasons by people left their last job (true we are told):

- My last employer insisted that all employees get to work by 9.00am every morning. I could not work under those conditions
- Was met with a string of broken promises and lies, as well as cockroaches

How would you react as the employer to receive a CV and letter for your advertised role where the applicant mentioned he had just been released from jail from stealing money from his employer?. His letter said that he was not certain but he hoped he would no re-offend. The role was at a church as their fund raising person. Well, at least he got a polite no thank you letter back.

We were mildly amused after hearing of recent CV that detailed how an applicant had over 20 years of breeding and training horses. Of course, the word should have read 'horses'. But seriously, while it was a very simple error it made a such a poor impression on the employer he did not proceed with the application as he was disappointed the applicant had not even proof read his CV before sending it to him. Small but costly error. We suggest you try not to make these 'mistakes' in your CV! "I had affair with my boss and also his big boss and they both went horribly wrong"
